Professional career

Me Andréanne Maurice practices mainly in labor and employment law.

Me Maurice joined the firm as an articling student as part of her professional training at the École du Barreau in 2024, before officially becoming a lawyer later that same year.

Me Maurice advises companies on individual and collective labor relations, including psychological harassment, occupational health and safety, access to information and the protection of personal information and human rights and freedoms.

During her studies, she distinguished herself by her hard work and academic achievements, which earned her a place on the Dean's Honours List for the second and third years of her bachelor's degree. Her keen interest in employment and labour law also earned her a scholarship, awarded to the student with the highest results in the Labor Law course. Her studies have also enabled her to develop negotiation, writing and research skills, having completed two research projects on the responsibility of doctors in emergencies and on the respect for human rights in armed conflicts.
